Q.1 In the next few weeks the UK government may sign a 35 year contract for a major new nuclear power station in Somerset called Hinkley Point. Companies owned by the French and Chinese governments would build the power station and get paid until around 2060 by selling the power it generates to UK consumers. Supporters of the project argue that the power station would create 25,000 job opportunities and generate 7% of the UK's electricity needs whilst also minimising carbon output. They also state that nuclear energy is the only proven low-carbon option for providing predictable electricity generation the UK. Opponents of the project argue that it supplies electricity at twice the current price, uses technology with unproven reliability, and in the 10 years it will take for the power station to become operational, gas and renewable energy will become cheaper than nuclear energy. They also state that if problems emerge during construction, the UK taxpayer will be partly responsible for returning money to the French and Chinese state-owned companies. Do you support or oppose the construction of the Hinkley Point nuclear power station in Somerset?
